ESTABLISHED A.D. 1841.

established a protectorate over that country and still recognise the authority of the Viceroy of the King of Annam, whereas Great Britain annexed Burmah out and out and incorporated it as an integral part of her Indian Empire.

How came Lord Rosebery to make the mistake he did? The answer to this question is very concisely given by our Hongkong contemporary, and for much of what follows we have to express our acknowledgment to that journal. At the time of the annexation of Upper Burmah there prevailed in diplomatic circles at home a wild and unreasonable dread of the view China might take of the annexation. It was thought that we might be harassed as France has been in Tonkin by hosts of Black Flags, pirates, and other freebooters, rigidly or wrongly supposed to be backed by the Chinese Government. The Chinese Ministers at Peking, seeing that Lord Rosebery was really in a state of panic, determined to make the most of the opportunity to get what they could. In past generations Chinese troops had overrun Burmah on one or two occasions, and occasional formal missions had been sent subsequently by the Kings of Burmah with presents to the Emperor of China. In Peking these presents were called tribute; in Burmah it is doubtful whether they were openly acknowledged as such. Anyway, China's claim to suzerainty was of the most shadowy and unsubstantial kind, and had the demand been met with a firm refusal from the first it would never have been pressed. But Lord Rosebery was in a fright, and the Marquis Tsien, seeing this, began to open his mouth very wide and to make very large demands indeed. He started with the preposterous demand that China should take over Burmah down to the Shweli river, including the important trading centre of Bhamo. This, of course, meant giving up to China not only all the debatable frontierland of rough mountains and wild tribes, but a slice of admittedly Burmese territory as well, to the actual possession of which China had not the shadow of a claim. This was too much even for Lord Rosebery to swallow, but he had not the courage to meet this demand even by a flat refusal, so he compromised with the Marquis Tsien and telegraphed to Mr. O'Conor, then "Chair d'Affaires" in Peking, to find out what the Chinese authorities really did want, and how they could be most cheaply pacified into acquiescence. Mr. O'Conor found out that the Chinese knew nothing of the Marquis' demand; they had never heard of the Shweli river, and were at heart surprisingly indifferent to what happened in Burmah. They did, however, owing some interest in the continuance of the tributary mission from Burmah and still more in the mission to Tibet which Mr. Colman Macaulay was then actively preparing to carry out. Lord Rosebery was bent on securing quiet for the moment, so he conceded the two points the Chinese officials cared about, agreed to postpone questions about Tibetan passports, and promised that the Buddhist Archbishop of Mandalay should go on in ten years to Peking. On the other hand, the Chinese agreed to postpone the delimitation of the frontier, and the claim for salice of Burmah, down to the Shweli river, was shelved. Practically Lord Rosebery did just what many a man in more humble circumstances has done; he secured present ease by drawing a bill on the future. His bill now is overdue, and by a piece of fine judicial prudence he is again in the place of Foreign Secretary and has to meet himself. Our contemporary suggests that the raising of the question at this particular juncture may possibly be due to a perception on the part of the Chinese that a Liberal Government would be more pliant than a Conservative one.

At all events the question has been raised, and unless Mr. O'Conor can settle with the Chinese otherwise we will next year see a tribute mission from a British dependency doing homage at Peking. It will be interesting to note how the British Minister will discharge the duty of chaperon on the occasion—for he hardly ignors the pressure of the mission or is indifferent to the treatment accorded to it. Presumably it will make its appearance in the Hall of Tributary Nations as a matter of course, and the strange proceeding will be duly set out in the Peking Gazette for the regulation of the official classes in China. It is true that practically the mission means nothing, but both in Burmah and China a meaning may, and in the last named country almost certainly will, be read into it unfavourable to the prestige of Great Britain. As to our position in Burmah the Convention is quite unequivocal, the second Article reading: "China agrees that in all matters whatsoever relating to the authority and rule which England is now exercising in Burmah England shall be free to do whatever she pleases fit and proper." If Lord Rosebery and Mr. O'Conor had only sturdily firm this recognition of British sovereignty might have been secured without being coupled with any humiliating condition as to tribute missions. But the mistake has been made and it will be hard to repair it. China, having obtained such a concession, doubtless very much to her own surprise, will be loth to relinquish it, and Great Britain will naturally be forced to carry their agreement, not being, like China, accustomed to ignore her treaty obligations. It would only be for a quid pro quo that China would consent to a dismemberment of the Burmese mission, and at present Great Britain has nothing to offer, for none of her numerous outstanding claims in connection with the anti-foreign riots and breaches of treaty stipulations could be abandoned with dignity, even if China would accept of such a settlement. As the case stands at present there seems no help for it but to submit to the humiliation of sending the tribute mission from Burmah as agreed upon and put the best face possible on such a very sorry business.

We have received from Messrs. Calbeck, Magruder & Co. a couple of useful paper enterers with a calendar on one side and the firm's advertisement on the other.

Yesterday morning shortly after eight o'clock a Chinese painter fell from the roof of the Hospital ship Messina and was drowned. The body never rose to the surface again and those present on the scene saw only a dark mass which went which disappeared. It is supposed that he had his paint tied to his person and so was held down.

A funeral service in memory of the officers and men of the Ching-Hai-hen, who were recently deceased in the Island Sea, took place on the 15th December at the Aoyama cemetery, Tokyo. About five thousand people, including many distinguished men—among others his Highness Prince Komatsu, the French and British Ministers together with Japanese field and naval officers and members of the Imperial Diet—were present on the occasion.

A leader in the Hupao advocates the universal education of female children in China. The writer expresses the opinion on that if the Chinese girls are educated in thoroughly the empire, at the end of a quarter of a century a great change for the better will easily be discernible. At present only girls belonging to the wealthier literary classes have a chance of being made educated, and only so far as may be knowledge of poetry, the playing of chess, and painting. They know nothing of history or books of a deeper nature.

The Taoist of Ningpo has the "shining correspondent of the Mercury writes, issued orders to all his subordinates, enjoining them to act forth in official notifications before the people the prevalence of unwholesome practices of infanticide in the inland districts of Ningpo, which are most largely practised in the northern provinces of China. The Marquis of Ningpo, who has been sent to the capital to attend the trials of the Amoy and Wing Lin, has been ordered to make an immediate investigation, and the statement of affairs shows that the liabilities amount to $800,000 only $100,000 has been paid out to date.

Mr. Phillips (instructed by Mr. Wilkinson) appeared on behalf of the Hop Yik Bank which the defendants had been compelled to pay to the court for the costs of the plaintiff. Mr. Wilkinson represented the defendants and agreed to judgment being entered on those terms against his clients.

His Lordship said—if I think Mr. Robinson has taken quite the proper course in advising your clients to this effect, because he is absolutely as clear as it possibly could be, and it is in the defendants' interest certainly not only in this case, but possibly in another direct case, that the trial should be deferred.

His Lordship will therefore make a date for the trial of the defendants to pay to the court for the costs of the plaintiff.

Mr. Donnay—That is my lord, I have applied to the Old Bailey to fix a date for the trial.

His Lordship—Please, to me that the idea of the Ordinance is that the public examination should be held before the first meeting of creditors is closed. That is the whole idea of it, I think, and a very salutary rule it is.

Mr. Phillips—That is, I suppose, my lord, for doubtless because it gives the creditors a right to object to the trial.
